RPL and REACH provide affordable food boxes for the community

Regina Public Library has partnered with Regina Education on Child Hunger (REACH) to offer healthy, low-cost food boxes for pickup at five library branches.

The food boxes can be ordered online through REACH's website, and they are available for pickup at Glen Elm, George Bothwell, Sherwood Village, Sunrise, and Regent branches.

"Regina Public Library is a valued partner for REACH's Good Food Box," says Matt Leisle, Executive Director of Reach, "Having library branches as pickup locations represents a significant step forward in making affordable, healthy food more accessible to everyone in Regina. Together, we're making it easier for our community to access what they need to thrive."

"Offering members of the community direct access to nutritious food at a low cost is a tangible way that the library can support the community," said Kimberley Hintz, Executive Director of Branch Libraries at Regina Public Library.

REACH Good Food Boxes are filled with a variety of fresh fruits, vegetables, and pantry items that can help everyone eat healthy and save money. Orders can be placed every two weeks and are available for pickup at the library and several locations across the city.
